9:20 am to 10:20 am

Join us for an author talk with Tasha Spillett, focused on her acclaimed graphic novel series, Surviving the City. We will explore themes of identity, belonging, resilience, and Indigenous storytelling. Students will learn about Tasha's writing journey, the inspiration behind the series, and how stories can challenge stereotypes and spark important conversations about justice and representation. We encourage students to ask questions and connect literature to real-world experiences. This event is intended for grades 7 – 12 but is open to everyone.

Tasha Spillett, PhD (she/her/hers), stands as a luminary at the intersection of Indigenous advocacy, education, and literature. As a celebrated author, educator, and advocate, her commitment to uplifting marginalized voices shines through her literary works, scholarly endeavours, and community-led initiatives. Tasha's dedication to fostering equitable learning environments and advocating for the liberation of Indigenous women and women of colour marks her as a guiding force toward a more inclusive future.

A collaboration between City Library, North Vancouver District Public Library, and Impact North Shore.
